Comparison of Open and Closed Divertor Conditions in DIII-D differential from 20% less efficient at particle removal because of higher flux expansion at the target plate. Higher, more peaked target plate particle flux profiles have been observed, however, with the grad B drift direction toward the plate. Recent results will be presented as well as comparisons at different values of core/edge density and neutral beam injected power.

1Work supported by U.S. DOE Contracts DE-AC03-89ER51114, DE-AC04-94AL85000, DE-AC05-96OR22464, W-7405-ENG-48, and Grant DE-FG03-95ER54294.